Death of a French Executioner.

The recent death of one Simon, a celebrated public executioner in the South of France, but who, outliving his fame, like many other artists, has died in the hospital at Carcassonne, has brought up the subject of death upon the scaffold once more in France. This Simon had been the hero of many adventures in the course of his career. One of these is recorded as being the original cause of the abolition of the punishment of branding. An unfortunate culprit being brought up to be marked on the shoulder with a red-hot iron by Simon, the latter let the instrument fall just when he had applied it to the flesh, so that the mark was not considered valid. Once more did he heat his iron, and once more did he miss the mark. Again a third time did he try amid the terrible yells of the sufferer, and the shouts of execration of the populace, until the unhappy wretch fainted away and was borne from the scaffold.

The affair made a great noise at the time, and a young advocate of Montpellier, where it happened, took the poor wretched convict's case in hand and sued the executioner for damages. The facts were palpable. The man had been burned to the very bone, so the Tribunal condemned the awkward executioner to 300 francs damages, which, the recipient being a convict, went into the public treasury. The next day, Simon was in the case of a priest, condemned to death for the murder of a woman at Aix. Simon's hatred of the priesthood was well known, so that the unfortunate manner in which he let fall the knife, cutting away a portion of the skull only, was attributed to vengeance rather than to accident; and the turbulent shrieks of the spectators so troubled the executioner, that on trying a second time, he let go the cord too soon, and cut off the hand of his assistant.

At this time the Court condemned its singularly unfortunate officer to three months' imprisonment and five hundred francs' fine. The next failure was at Baume, where a young preacher had been condemned for the murder of a garde chasse. Simon being unable to compete either in strength or skill with the criminal, a frightful scene took place on the scaffold, the account of which has prevented the sentence of death from being passed since that time in that same city. The struggle ended in the defeat of Simon and his two assistants, and the culprit was conveyed back to prison amid an emote of the populace of the town. This time the parades of the South resolved that though foolhardy to abolish the punishment of death they were not forbidden to abolish the executioner, and dismissed Simon from his office. But the love of his profession was strong upon him to the last, and he would officiate as amateur whenever the professional was prevented from attending. His previous instincts were satisfied at last by his appointment to a place as attendant at the dissecting room of the hospital of Lyons, where he remained until, worn out and infirm, he went to die at his native place. Victor Hugo had made this man celebrated for a time by his "Last Days of a Condemned Convict," but the temporary publicity given to his name had faded long before his retirement into the obscurity for which it is evident he was best fitted.

OLD ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING.—To make what is termed a pound pudding, take of raisins well stoned, currants thoroughly washed, one pound each; chop a pound of suet very fine and mix with them; add a quarter of a pound of flour or bread finely crumbed, three ounces of sugar, one ounce and a half of grated lemon peel, a blade of mace, half a dozen eggs well beaten; work it well together, put it into a cloth, tie it firmly—allowing room to swell—and boil not less than five hours. It should not be suffered to stop boiling.
